

The Petrie-Flom Center, in collaboration with the Solomon Center at Yale Law School, is proud to announce the publication of our edited volume COVID-19 and the Law: Disruption, Impact, and Legacy. This timely volume, based on the 2021 Petrie-Flom Center Annual Conference seminar series, identifies the right questions to ask as we take stock of pandemic realities and provides guidance for the many stakeholders of COVID-19's legal legacy.

Next month, join us for Aligning Criminal Practice with Addiction Science, presented by the Petrie-Flom Center in partnership with the Center for Law, Brain and Behavior at Massachusetts General Hospital. Moderated by Senior Fellow Stephanie Tabashneck, this discussion will describe legal responses to substance use disorders (SUD) that contradict neuroscience and behavioral research and science-informed criminal justice approaches that better support treatment and recovery.

Key Considerations for Patient-Reported Outcome Measures

Patient-reported outcome measures are questionnaires that patients fill out on tablets or other devices. Because they are likely to become more commonly implemented in the future as an efficient way to gather and process medical data, it is important to analyze their strengths and weaknesses.
