

Yesterday marked the launch of our three-part event series on Achieving Telehealth's Potential.

Telehealth has been an invaluable tool for preserving health care access during the pandemic. However, most of the temporary regulatory changes facilitating access to telemedicine will be rolled back after the public health emergency expires. Amid this changing landscape, this event series brings together experts to chart a path forward for interstate telehealth practices.

If you missed the first event, don't worry, we have two more discussions scheduled for the weeks ahead. On March 9th, we'll host the second installment of the series, which will focus on The Federal Policy Landscape for Interstate Telehealth Practices. The following week, on March 13th, we'll hold the third and final event in the series, The State Policy Landscape for Interstate Telehealth Practices. Together, these three events will provide a comprehensive look at the challenges of developing interstate telehealth practices, particularly for in-demand specialties. See all of our upcoming events on our website, and catch up on past events via our YouTube channel.

Personal Crusades for Public Health

Public health in the U.S. has collapsed. In its place, we are left with an insufficient alternative:

personal crusades.
