

With the spring semester underway, our event programming is in full swing.

On March 9, we will host a holistic discussion of the pandemic's impact on persons with disabilities. While many forms of disability-based discrimination, such as accessing ventilators in hospitals and polling places in elections, have been explored in academia and the media over the past year, this interdisciplinary panel will look deeper into the far-ranging effects of the pandemic on people with disabilities, both in the United States and around the world.

The following week on March 17, we're hosting an expert panel for a conversation on the privatization of public health. During the COVID-19 pandemic, private companies have stepped into public health roles traditionally held by government agencies and non-governmental organizations. This panel will delve into the question: What is lost when public health becomes privatized?

And you won't want to miss the final installment of our COVID-19 and the Law Seminar Series, The Health Care System in the Age of COVID-19, co-hosted with the Solomon Center at Yale Law School on March 16. Register for these events and preview more of our spring programming on our upcoming events page.

Event Video: What COVID-19 Teaches Us

About Health Justice and the Path Forward

What can we learn about health justice from the COVID-19 pandemic? On February 16th, experts gathered to discuss the issue as part of the COVID-19 and the Law seminar series hosted by the Petrie-Flom Center and the Solomon Center for Health Law and Policy. If you missed it, the video from the event is now available on our website.
