

This week, we are excited to introduce a new digital symposium: Global Responses to COVID-19: Rights, Democracy, and the Law. We've launched this symposium in order to present a snapshot of the spectrum of rights-related measures adopted in dozens of countries to date. By scrutinizing the rationales and quality of justification for legal action, we seek to highlight the complex relationship between population well-being and the functioning of democratic institutions. The symposium will run for several weeks on Mondays and Thursdays as a series on the Bill of Health blog. As the entries are published, they will populate on an interactive map on the symposium homepage.

In addition to this global snapshot of the response to COVID-19, the Petrie-Flom Center has gathered a panel to discuss the unique public health challenge of trying to manage COVID-19 more locally, within incarceration facilities. Don't miss the livestream on May 20, Incarcerated Populations and COVID-19: Public Health, Ethical, and Legal Concerns. The registration link and list of panelists is available on the event page.
