

This week, Bill of Health launched its fall kick-off symposium, Health Justice: Engaging Critical Perspectives in Health Law and Policy, guest edited by Ruqaiijah Yearby and Lindsay F. Wiley.

The symposium "seeks to further define the contours of and debates within the health justice movement and explore how scholars, activists, communities, and public health officials can use health justice frameworks to achieve health equity," as Yearby and Wiley explain in their introductory post. Each weekday, a new contribution will be published, so check back often for the latest. And join us Wednesday, September 15th for a moderated discussion with the editors and four symposium contributors. You can find more details and registration information on our website.

Also next week, we will host an expert panel on the monumental campaign that legalized abortion in Argentina. We are honored to host a number of leaders instrumental to the success of this campaign, including two Argentinian congresswomen and the Legal and Technical Secretary to the President of Argentina. Register now for this important discussion, which will be held over Zoom on September 14th.

Health Justice: Love, Freedom Dreaming,

and Power Building

Viewing health justice through the lens of love concretizes it when I am otherwise tempted to treat it as an abstract notion.
